

Dear Diary,

Today was quite an interesting day, and I just had to share it with you. You won't believe the dream I had last night. It was about that guy from my English class. In the dream, he asked me to be his girlfriend, and I said yes!

It all felt so real; the way he looked into my eyes and the genuine smile on his face when he popped the question. It made my heart race, and I couldn't help but feel a rush of happiness. We walked hand in hand, and I felt like I was on top of the world.

Of course, I woke up to the reality that it was just a dream. But it got me thinking. There have been moments in class when I've caught him staring at me, and it's not just my imagination. His gaze is warm and seems to hold a hint of something more.

Could it be that he's been thinking about me as well? It's hard to say, and I don't want to jump to conclusions. Maybe he's just a friendly and observant guy, but there's a part of me that hopes there's something more to it.

I'm not sure how to approach this situation, Diary. I want to know if there's any truth to my dream, but I'm also a bit nervous about finding out. What if it's all in my head? What if he's not interested?

For now, I'll keep an eye on his actions in class and try to gauge if there's any genuine interest. It's exciting, yet nerve-wracking, and I can't help but wonder if dreams have a way of revealing our deepest desires.

I'll keep you updated, Diary, as I navigate this intriguing situation.

Yours truly,
Nikoletta

PS : yes, I just revealed my irl name ;)