

Once there was a loud albatross. He shouted to everyone no matter how mundane the conversation. "Hello there!" He squawked to Mr. Turtle. Mr. Turtle, like all the other creatures was tired of the constant yelling. So the turtle challenged him. "I bet you can't fly and touch the sun." "I can do it!" The albatross said, excitedly. The albatross flew as high as he could. When he did, he saw a terrible storm coming. So he did what he did best, he yelled. "Run!" He called, "A storm is coming!" He cried loud enough for all the animals to hear him. It was so good that the heavens opened up for him. There he was appointed the job of warning of storms and lightning. The albatross had finally found a place for his voice!
