

Welcome to Rome, Italy!

Home of:

- Ruins
- The Pantheon
- Vatican City and St Peter's Basilica
- (technically another country)
- More pushy vendors
- Pickpockets
- The Colosseum

Other than pickpockets, there were a lot of ruins which were cool for the first day or so. My least favorite out of the places I visited because of the crowds

I despise cities

Rome was just more crowded and less pedestrian friendly

Too many uncaring identical people busy trying not to run into people

Just had and about to have another break down the loot

Fanny-pack from my mom's 80s themed birthday party

Storage for phone+money

Victim

saw taking a vacation

no sense of personal space

(Failed)

Pickpocket

poorly done make up?

all pick-pockets have pointed eyebrows

"innocent" appearance

sunglasses inside to hide storing at other peoples stuff

shriveled heart

• too many bags for holding stuff that isn't theirs the poor people she stole them from selfish fingers

I almost got pickpocketed. I live in the country so this is not something that happens around me. But apparently in Rome.

I was trying to get on a subway through a super crowded tunnel. I noticed an old lady next to me so I gave her room to pass me by slowing down. But she didn't pass me even though she had lots of room. I give her eye contact (try to, couldn't see through her indoor sunglasses). She's still too close to me when I sense her hand reaching towards me. I give her eye contact again and say "Leave me alone" very firmly. Then she disappears into the crowd like a banished fae or something. I had just started cramping and was not having anything. Not even from a creepy old lady.

It wasn't really that exciting but was the first time someone had tried to pick pocket me
