

Two girls meet at school, and talk about their favorite things. They start to fall in love, but soon realize they are treated differently when their relationship is revealed, by Lola's little brother.

Lola Briggs stepped into the loud, chatty cafeteria. It was her first day at Devon Middle School. Who should I sit with? Lola thought anxiously. My whole school year depends on it. But before Lola could say anything, a girl with short, pink hair turned in her seat.

“Hi! I’ve heard about you!” She beamed. “You’re the new student!”

“Umm,” Lola was quite shy, “yes, that’s me. I’m Lola Briggs.”

“I’m Olive. Olive Jameson.” Olive said, bowing in her seat. Lola stared around the room. There were five tables, and Olive was sitting alone.

Olive stared at Lola’s hair. “LOVE your hair, Lola!” Lola stared down at her brown braids.

“Thank you, Olive.” She said, embarrassed that Olive had said this in front of many other people. “Can I sit here?”

“Of course!” The two sat and ate for a while. Lola noticed that Olive seemed to not have any friends at all.

“Where do I go for class?” Lola stared at her schedule.

“Can I see that?” Olive asked, munching on her apple. “Sweet! You have fOuR classes with me!”