

The Ganges River: Daily Life

A historian can make inferences that demonstrate why the Ganges River is an integral part of daily life in Varanasi, India. The first inference that they could make is that the boats in the water helped daily life. Having marine technology allows the community in Varanasi to travel, fish and collect plants that grow on the water's surface. We know this because in the picture, there are travelers, fisherman and other people in boats on the Ganges.

Another inference I could make is that residents have a religion. In the picture, there are many people sitting on the wall and turret, praying. This connects to the importance of the river because people are thankful for their body of water and demonstrates the spiritual significance of the Ganges River.

The last inference is that there is growth of the cities. Without the river, they would probably not be able to build as strong and sturdy buildings. These are some inferences historians could make about daily life in Varanasi, India.
