

Hello Notability Peace Makers.

We have another problem to take care of. There is a person named @eulers_number_e and he is bullying AND sending suspicious links to notability. The problem is he isn't (technically) bullying, he's just assuming random things about popular drawers on notability. We do not know if this Euler guy or girl is knowing what they are doing.

As for you Euler, PLEASE PLEASE PLEASE explain what your doing. I understand that you are trying to make a career for yourself but your hurting random people with false information and spreading links. I don't know what the link has because my school blocked that website, but i already know its bad. You've been doing this for... DANG 4 MONTHS!?! And i just saw that you ALSO accused someone for tracing and you wrote an apology to that person for mis information. Just to make it clear again, Notability is a app for artist and creativity. So the fact that you came onto here to complain to random people about tracing?

So that you don't think I'm being mean, some people NEED to trace because they are new artist OR they want to show off something else. For example, a user named @popypopcorn was tracing drawings. I had no problem with this. But some people wanted to stop this tracing. I understood these people and i confronted poppy to give credit. Poppy wasn't giving credit for the original artist. But now, i hope, she does. \

But Euler you have to understand you can't accuse people without evidence. I believe that a person is not guilty until proven guilty and right now, you seem like the guilty.

I hope you understand

-Samcattt

Response is on the next page, please make sure to thoroughly read all paragraphs.
Thank you.

Hello, there appears to be a few misunderstanding regarding this account's last two posts. Each point of Sam's post will be broken down in order.

“he is bullying AND sending suspicious links to notability”

Please understand, the aim of these post is not to hate and harass the user, but rather to encourage them to be the best artist they can be. As for the “suspicious links,” the link that can be seen in the description of the post you're referring to is quite far from dangerous. “Magma” is a collaborative art website that allows multiple users to draw on the same canvas in real time. This was used to showcase evidence that suggested that @urfav4rt1st was tracing as the website is easily accessible with the use of a link.

“As for you Euler, PLEASE PLEASE PLEASE explain what your doing. I understand that you are trying to make a career for yourself but your hurting random people with false information and spreading links”

Here is an explanation: this account aims to encourage users to be better artists by either crediting the original artist they have traced or at least being truthful about it. False information is something this account always ensures to avoid. It is unwise to make a claim without evidence, which is why a handful of evidence is presented after making a claim. If you have found a mishap in this account's posts please bring to light so it may be corrected.

“I don't know what the link has because my school blocked that website, but i already know its bad”

The “suspicious link” again, is a collaborative art website that allows multiple users to draw on the same canvas in real time. If you'd like to know the contents of the link, please go to the second most recent post on this account, as it is just a copy and paste of it (aside from a few extra pieces of evidence).

“You've been doing this for... DANG 4 MONTHS!?”

That is just untrue (“false information,” if you will). The most recent post on this account goes back no more than 2 months ago. It is unclear where you got this number from.

“And i just saw that you ALSO accused someone for tracing and you wrote an apology to that person for mis information.”

Again, this can be classified as “false information.” The person you are referring to is @potuc, an artist that this account has called out for tracing 2 months ago. She was indeed tracing, and evidence was there to prove it. She immediately apologised for it and took down the traced posts. The apology you are referring to is an apology for calling her out in such a rude matter, not misinformation. If you do not believe this account, please go ask @potuc herself (and also follow her, her art is rather nice).

“some people NEED to trace because they are new artist OR they want to show off something else. For example, a user named @popypopcorn was tracing drawings. I had no problem with this. But some people wanted to stop this tracing. I understood these people and i confronted poppy to give credit. Poppy wasn't giving credit for the original artist.”

Of course, this account does not want to discourage people from tracing. As stated many times before, the act of tracing is not inherently a bad thing. In fact it can be rather beneficial, either as a helpful learning tool for artists or a fun pastime. HOWEVER, problems arises when users trace but claim it as their own and/or refuse to give credit. The situation is the same as @popypopcorn, the tracing is fine but they do not give any credit, which is not. Funnily enough, your co CEO @r0_yal has notified this account in regards to the situation in hopes of a post being made on them. However it seems the user has left the community for good so her request was denied.

“But Euler you have to understand you can't accuse people without evidence. I believe that a person is not guilty until proven guilty and right now, you seem like the guilty.”

You are absolutely correct, accusing people without evidence is very foolish. However evidence was brought to light (please refer to the second most recent post on this account or ask @potuc on her account on her own situation).

Now, to addresses the comments you made in this account's posts.

“It is a VERY common notability rule to NOT post suspicious links”

After reading through the notability guidelines, this account was not able to find any rules regarding links of any sort. If you could please show which section you are referring to, the link will be removed.

“since your so good at trying to make people lose followers by false information, would i interest you in the notability peace makers. Because i need u to stop accusing people. Tracing art is ok.”

It is unclear what you mean by your first statement, as @potuc lost only 1 follower, and although @urfav4rt1st's follower count did lower at a point, that is more likely due to the mass banning that have been occurring. After some consideration, this account would like to join the notability peace makers. But that is only if you allow this account to continue to make these kinds of posts. The last two points have already been explained in previous paragraphs.

Hopefully some misunderstanding were cleared up. These posts do not aim to target and hurt people. Perhaps after this situation an acquaintance or even friendship can be formed.“e” patiently waits for you response.

-e

