

The General of Cat

- Has been in business for 10 years.
- Is currently run by a man called Squat.
- Sells decent, home-cooked meals.
- Offers comfy rooms with comfy beds.

- It looks like a typical tavern.
- It is known for attracting a certain crowd.
- The patrons inside are neither loud nor quiet, look messy, and seem friendly.
- The serving staff will not hesitate to throw out troublesome patrons.

Drinks

A refreshing glass of fruit squash.

Made from the concentrated juice of a sweet type of fruit, it is a specialty juice with a full-bodied flavour and a mild aftertaste. It is opaque, has a slippery texture, and is a pale caramel colour.

It's best served room-temperature, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is very expensive and served in a mug with a mound of small fruit pieces.

Large quantities can induce a feeling of increased strength.

It is very high in sugar.

A nice cup of tea.

Made from tea leaves from a distant land, it is a strong tea with a sour taste and a powerful aftertaste. It is translucent, has a smooth texture, and is a muted azure colour.

It's best served lukewarm, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is very cheap and served in a modest cup.

The first sip usually burns the throat.

A soothing mug of hot "chocolate".

Made with water and processed dried twigs from this country, it is a strong hot "chocolate" with a sweet and bitter taste, a green vegetable flavour and a strong aftertaste. It is opaque, has a creamy texture, is an ashy peach colour, and has a thick foam.

It's best served room-temperature, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is incredibly expensive and served in a beer mug.

One of the ingredients, if not prepared properly, is deadly.

A refreshing glass of vegetable squash.

Made from the concentrated juice of a sickly sweet type of vegetable, it is juice with a pungent flavour and a strong aftertaste. It is transparent, is a vivid green-gray colour and has a thin texture.

It's best served lukewarm, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is expensive and served in a modest cup.

The ingredients are good for boosting alertness.

A stimulating cup of "coffee".

Made by roasting then boiling a certain type of beans from another country, it is a weak "coffee" with a bitter taste, a smoky flavour and a bland aftertaste. It is opaque, has a gooey texture, is a vibrant amber colour, and has a thick foam.

It's best served room-temperature, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is expensive and served in a cup with an olive.

It can cause tooth rotting.

An intoxicating alcoholic drink.

Made from fermented ground-up tree bark from a distant source, it is a slightly alcoholic drink with a pungent flavour and a pungent aftertaste. It is opaque, is a pastel copper colour, has a thin texture, and has a fine foam.

It's best served lukewarm, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is cheap and served in a small mug.

Once prepared, it must be drunk right away, or it will spoil.

A fizzy can of soda.

Made from salty fruit syrup, it is an overwhelmingly fizzy soda with a sweet and bitter taste and a neutral aftertaste. It is transparent, has a silky texture, and is a pale ivory colour.

It's best served room-temperature, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is very cheap and served in a massive mug with a sprinkling of salt and pepper.

It is very addictive.