Drinks

A stimulating cup of "coffee".

Made by roasting then boiling a certain type of moss from this country, it is a weak "coffee" with a salty taste and a powerful aftertaste. It is opaque, has a syrupy texture, is an ashy crimson colour, and has a fine foam.

It's best served very hot, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is very expensive and served in a beer mug.

A nice cup of tea.

Made from tea leaves from an unknown source, it is a weak tea with a sweet and savoury taste, a candy flavour and a weak aftertaste. It is transparent, is a dark emerald green colour and has a slippery texture.

It's best served hot, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is cheap and served in a small mug with sugar and milk. It is a source of bad breath, typically sold to bad or unwelcome customers.

A soothing mug of hot "chocolate".

Made with water and processed dried grasses from a nearby land, it is a very strong hot "chocolate" with a spicy taste, a chocolaty flavour and a strong aftertaste. It is opaque, has a sticky texture, is a washed-out magenta colour, and has a thick foam.

It's best served almost boiling, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is very expensive and served in a cup.

Large quantities can induce a feeling of warmth.

A nice cup of tea.

Made from ground-up tree bark from this country, it is a weak tea with a bitter taste, a green vegetable flavour and a strong aftertaste. It is transparent, is an ashy lime colour and has a watery texture.

It's best served very hot, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is quite expensive and served in a cup.
