Drinks

A refreshing glass of fruit squash.

Made from the concentrated juice of a sharp type of fruit, it is a rare juice with a neutral flavour and a very strong aftertaste. It is transparent, is a drab ochre colour and has a smooth texture.

It's best served lukewarm, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is cheap and served in a tall glass with a handle.

Large quantities can induce nausea.

An intoxicating alcoholic drink.

Made from fermented grasses from another country, it is a slightly alcoholic drink with a pungent flavour and a weak aftertaste.

It is opaque, has a watery texture, is a deep blue-black colour, and has a fine foam. Large quantities can induce sugar highs.

It's best served cold, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is incredibly expensive and served in a glass.

It's easy to get carried away and drink too much.

A fizzy can of soda.

Made from salty and sour fruit syrup, it is a delicately fizzy soda with a sickly sweet taste, a candy flavour and a strong aftertaste. It is translucent, is a florescent sky blue-black colour and has a thin texture.

It's best served lukewarm, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is expensive and served in a cup.

Large quantities can induce a strong urge to dance.

An intoxicating alcoholic drink.

Made from fermented grains from a nearby land, it is an overwhelmingly alcoholic drink with a weak flavour and a powerful aftertaste. It is transparent, has a smooth texture, is a deep tan-gray colour, and has a thick foam which remains even after the liquid is gone.

It's best served room temperature, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is cheap and served in a mug with small fruit pieces and sour and savoury fruit juice.

It's easy to get carried away and drink too much.

A refreshing glass of vegetable squash.

Made from the concentrated juice of a sweet and savoury type of vegetable, it is a rare juice with a strong flavour and a very strong aftertaste. It is opaque, has a thin texture, and is a vivid wenge-gray colour.

It's best served cool, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is reasonably priced and served in a can.

A soothing mug of hot "chocolate".

Made with malted milk and processed dried seeds from this country, it is a neutral hot "chocolate" with a sweet and sour taste, a buttery flavour and a strong aftertaste. It is opaque, is a faded citron colour, has a thin texture, and has a thick foam which remains even after the liquid is gone.

It's best served hot, and when sold in restaurants and bars it is incredibly expensive and served in a small mug with an olive.

Large quantities can induce energy bursts.
